IN THE SUPREME COURT
CRIMINAL LAW DIVISION
2014/CRI/bail/00337

BETWEEN

RONALD TELFORT

Applicant

AND

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS

Respondent

Before: The Hon. Justice Neil Brathwaite

Appearances: The Applicant Pro Se
 Ms. Destiny Morley, Ms. G'Ann Hepburn for the Respondent

Hearing Date: 20th July A.D. 2026

Ruling Date: 4th August A.D. 2026

RULING ON BAIL

1. The Applicant is a forty-four year old Bahamian male who was arraigned in the Magistrate's Court on 27th June 2025 on charges of Murder and Armed Robbery. He now seeks bail and submits that there is no evidence that he has committed a crime, and that witnesses hate him. The Applicant was employed at a shipping company at the time of his arrest, and states that he is diabetic, and that the medication provided to him at the Bahamas Department of Corrections is not working. He further states that he has been on bail before, and never missed a court date, so that he is not a flight risk, and that he is not a danger to the public.
2. In opposing the application, the Respondent proffered the affidavit of Cashena Thompson, Counsel in the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions. The documents exhibited to that affidavit indicate that on Sunday 15th June 2025, Inspector Lernex Williams exited a van at the Palmdale Shopping Plaza and was about to make a deposit at Royal Bank when he was approached by two males who had emerged from a white Suzuki Swift. Gunshots were exchanged, and the inspector and one of the males were struck. The Suzuki then pulled beside the fallen robber, and the driver collected the money before leaving. The entire incident was captured by security cameras.

3. Following the incident, officers obtained a statement from a female who indicated that her deceased boyfriend had been a close friend of the Applicant, to whom she sold her boyfriend's vehicle in 2023. She identified the Suzuki Swift used in this incident as that vehicle. She also viewed a video of this incident, and identified the Applicant as the person who was trying to assist the fallen robber on the video. Another witness indicated that she was the girlfriend of Joseph St. Cyr, also known as Al, who was the assailant killed during this incident, and that after the incident she received a telephone call from the Applicant, who told her that Al had been killed in Palmdale, and who instructed her to collect Al's vehicle from Collin's Avenue, the inference being that the Applicant had been with Al and therefore knew where he had left the vehicle. There is also a statement from a friend of the girlfriend of the Applicant, who also viewed security footage of the incident and identified the Applicant. The antecedents of the Applicant are also exhibited and indicate that he was imprisoned in 2010 for Possession of an Unlicensed Firearm and Possession of Ammunition.
4. The Respondent submits that the evidence is cogent, and that the Applicant is not of good character, having regard to his previous convictions. The Respondent therefore submits that the Applicant should remain in custody pending his trial to ensure his attendance at trial, to prevent re-offending, and to preserve public order.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

5. The tensions surrounding an application for bail have been considered in many cases. In Richard Hepburn and The Attorney General SCCr. App. No 276 of 2014, Justice of Appeal Allen opined that:

“5. Bail is increasingly becoming the most vexing, controversial and complex issue confronting free societies in every part of the world. It highlights the tension between two important but competing interests: the need of the society to be protected from persons alleged to have committed crime; and the fundamental constitutional canons, which secure freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention and serve as the bulwark against punishment before conviction.”

6. Indeed, the recognition of the tension between these competing interests is reflected in the following passage from the Privy Council's decision in Hurnam The State [2006] LRC 370. At page 374 of the judgment Lord Bingham said inter alia:

"...the courts are routinely called upon to consider whether an unconvicted suspect or defendant shall be released on bail, subject to conditions, pending his trial. Such decisions very often raise questions of importance both to the individual suspect or defendant and to the community as whole. The interests of the individual is, of course, to remain at liberty unless or until he is convicted of crime sufficiently serious to deprive him of his liberty". Any loss of liberty before that time, particularly if he is acquitted or never tried, will prejudice him and, in many cases, his livelihood and his family. But the community has countervailing interests, in seeking to ensure that the course of justice is not thwarted by the flight of the suspect or defendant or perverted by his interference with witnesses or evidence and that he does not take advantage of the inevitable delay before trial to commit further offences..."

6. At paragraph 11 she further noted that

"The general right to bail clearly requires judges on such an application, to conduct realistic assessment of the right of the accused to remain at liberty and the public's interests as indicated by the grounds prescribed in Part A for denying bail. Ineluctably, in some circumstances, the presumption of innocence and the right of an accused to remain at liberty, must give way to accommodate that interest."

7. The presumption of innocence is enshrined in Article 20(2)(a) of the Constitution of The Bahamas which states:

"Every person who is charged with a criminal offence – (a) shall be Presumed to be innocent until he is proved or has pleaded guilty".

8. Furthermore, Article 19(1) provides as follows:

"19. (1) No person shall be deprived of his personal liberty save as may be authorised by law in any of the following cases-

- (a) in execution of the sentence or order of a court, whether established for The Bahamas or some other country, in respect of a criminal offence of which he has been convicted or in consequence of his unfitness to plead to a criminal charge or in execution of the order of a court on the grounds of his contempt of that court or of another court or tribunal;
- (b) in execution of the order of a court made in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation imposed upon him by law;
- (c) for the purpose of bringing him before a court in execution of the order of a court;
- (d) upon reasonable suspicion of his having committed, or of being about to commit, a criminal offence;

(e) in the case of a person who has not attained the age of eighteen years, for the purpose of his education or welfare;
(f) for the purpose of preventing the spread of an infectious or contagious disease or in the case of a person who is, or is reasonably suspected to be, of unsound mind, addicted to drugs or alcohol, or a vagrant, for the purpose of his care or treatment or the protection of the community;
(g) for the purpose of preventing the unlawful entry of that person into The Bahamas or for the purpose of effecting the expulsion, extradition or other lawful removal from The Bahamas of that person or the taking of proceedings relating thereto; and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, a law may, for the purposes of this subparagraph, provide that a person who is not a citizen of The Bahamas may be deprived of his liberty to such extent as may be necessary in the execution of a lawful order requiring that person to remain within a specified area within The Bahamas or prohibiting him from being within such an area.

(3) Any person who is arrested or detained in such a case as is mentioned in subparagraph (1)(c) or (d) of this Article and who is not released shall be brought without undue delay before a court; and if any person arrested or detained in such a case as is mentioned in the said subparagraph (1)(d) is not tried within a reasonable time he shall (without prejudice to any further proceedings that may be brought against him) be released either unconditionally or upon reasonable conditions, including in particular such conditions as are reasonably necessary to ensure that he appears at a later date for trial or for proceedings preliminary to trial”.

9. The relevant provisions of the Bail Act Chapter 103 read as follows:

“4. (2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other law, any person charged with an offence mentioned in Part C of the First Schedule, shall not be granted bail unless the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the person charged

(a) has not been tried within a reasonable time;

(c) should be granted bail having regard to all the relevant factors including those specified in Part A of the First Schedule and subsection (2B), and where the court makes an order for the release, on bail, of that person it shall include in the record a written statement giving the reasons for the order of the release on bail.

(2A) For the purposes of subsection (2) (a) ...

- (a) without limiting the extent of a reasonable time, a period of three years from the date of the arrest or detention of the person charged shall be deemed to be a reasonable time;
- (b) delay which is occasioned by the act or conduct of the accused is to be excluded from any calculation of what is considered to be a reasonable time.

(2B) For the purposes of subsection (2)(c), in deciding whether or not to grant bail to a person charged with an offence mentioned in Part C of the First Schedule, the character and antecedents of the person charged, the need to protect the safety of the public order and where appropriate, the need to protect the safety of the victim or victims of the alleged offence, are to be primary considerations.”

9. The factors referred to in Part A are:

“PART A

In considering whether to grant bail to a defendant, the court shall have regard to the following factors—

(a) whether there are substantial grounds for believing that the defendant, if released on bail, would—

- (i) fail to surrender to custody or appear at his trial;
- (ii) commit an offence while on bail; or
- (iii) interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice, whether in relation to himself or any other person;

(b) whether the defendant should be kept in custody for his own protection or, where he is a child or young person, for his own welfare;

(c) whether he is in custody in pursuance of the sentence of a Court or any authority acting under the Defence Act;

(d) whether there is sufficient information for the purpose of taking the decisions required by this Part or otherwise by this Act;

(e) whether having been released on bail in or in connection with the proceedings for the offence, he is arrested pursuant to section 12;

(f) whether having been released on bail previously, he is charged subsequently either with an offence similar to that in respect of which he was so released or with an offence which is punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year;

(g) the nature and seriousness of the offence and the nature and strength of the evidence against the defendant.”;

10. In an application for bail pursuant to section 4(2)(c), the court is therefore required to consider the relevant factors set out in Part A of the First Schedule, as well as the provisions of section 2B.

11. In considering those factors, I note that the Applicant is charged with very serious offences involving the use of a firearm, and resulting in the death of another. I am mindful that this is not a free-standing ground for the refusal of bail, yet it is an important factor that I must consider in determining whether the accused is likely to appear for trial.

12. In the Court of Appeal decision of Jonathan Armbrister v The Attorney General SCCrApp. No 45 of 2011, it was stated that:

“The seriousness of the offence, with which the accused is charged and the penalty which it is likely to entail upon conviction, has always been, and continues to be an important consideration in determining whether bail should be granted or not. Naturally, in cases of murder and other serious offences, the seriousness of the offence should invariably weigh heavily in the scale against the grant of bail”.

13. I note also paragraph 30 of Jeremiah Andrews vs. The Director of Public Prosecutions SCCrApp No. 163 of 2019 where it states:

“30. These authorities all confirm therefore that the seriousness of the offence, coupled with the strength of the evidence and the likely penalty which is likely to be imposed upon conviction, have always been, and continue to be important considerations in determining whether bail should be granted or not. However, these factors may give rise to an inference that the defendant may abscond. That inference can be weakened by the consideration of other relevant factors disclosed in the evidence. eg the applicant’s resources, family connections..

14. While no direct evidence has been provided that the Applicant will not appear for his trial, the Applicant is charged with Murder and Armed Robbery, which attract a maximum penalty of life imprisonment. That possible sentence raises the issue of the likelihood of not appearing for trial.

15. That likelihood of flight must be contrasted with the nature of the evidence against the Applicant. In Cordero McDonald v. The Attorney General SCCrApp. No. 195 of 2016, Allen P., at paragraph 34 stated,

“It is not the duty of a judge considering a bail application to decide disputed facts or law. Indeed, it is not expected that on such an application a judge will conduct a forensic examination of the evidence. The judge must simply decide whether the evidence raises a reasonable suspicion of the commission of the offences by the appellant, such as to justify the deprivation of his liberty by arrest, charge and detention. Having done that he must then consider the relevant factors and determine whether he ought to grant him bail.”

16. In considering the cogency of the evidence, I note the following statement from the Court of Appeal in Stephon Davis v DPP SCCrApp. No. 20 of 2023:

“In our view "strong and cogent evidence" is not the critical factor on a bail application. The judge is only required to evaluate whether the witness statements show a case that is plausible on its face. To put it another way, there must be some evidence before the court capable of establishing the guilt of the appellant. In essence, the test is prima facie evidence, comparable to what is required at the end of the prosecution's case in a criminal trial. We can find a useful summary of the strength of the evidence required at the end of the prosecution's case in the headnote to the Privy Council's decision in Ellis Taibo [1996] 48 WIR 74:

"On a submission of no case to answer, the criterion to be applied by the trial judge is whether there is material on which a jury could, without irrationality, be satisfied of guilt; if there is, the judge is required to allow the trial to proceed.”

17. I have considered what has been placed before me, and I note that the affidavit in response states that the Applicant has been identified from surveillance footage, and that he has also been identified as the owner of the vehicle used during this incident. That evidence in my view rises to the level of a strong prima facie case as is required in Stephon Davis decision above. I have also considered the contention of the Applicant that the witnesses hate him, which might adversely impact their credibility, but that is clearly a matter to be considered at trial, rather than in a bail application.
18. While bearing in mind the presumption of innocence, I am concerned that the Applicant in this matter faces a weighty penalty if convicted such as to raise the inference of a risk of flight. I am also concerned at the danger to public safety, as this incident involved a brazen and coordinated attack in a public area in the middle of the day. I am further concerned that the witnesses in this matter are well known to the Applicant so that when considered the likely jeopardy to the Applicant if those witnesses testify, the issue of witness interference is raised. There is also the very real risk of re-offending, as the Applicant has previously been convicted of firearm offences, and is again charged with offences involving the use of firearms, this time with more dire consequences.
19. I also bear in mind the case of Dwayne Heastie v AG SCCrApp No. 261 of 2015 where the court said as follows: per Isaacs JA:

“The learned judge ought to have had regard to Part A(b) of the Bail Amendment Act, to wit, whether the defendant should be kept in custody for his own protection, and concluded that in the present climate of apparent vigilantism in the country, the appellant should remain in custody for his own protection. When courts are considering the grant of bail for persons charged with murder, judicial notice may be taken of the number of persons who have been charged with murder and released on bail who have themselves become victims of homicide. The appellant is alleged to have killed a family man of Haitian origin in an unprovoked attack where the man was seeking payment for work he had performed for the appellant. The events are of recent vintage and the emotions are quite raw. These circumstances make for a volatility which may only be defused by the continued detention of the appellant.”

20. The Applicant in this case is alleged to have shot and killed a well-known police officer during a brazen robbery in a public place. In my view, it would be best in these circumstances to permit some time to pass to assuage any volatility. I also bear in mind the previous convictions of the Applicant, and the scourge of gun violence presently engulfing these shores.

CONCLUSION

21. In considering whether conditions could be imposed to ensure the attendance of the Applicant at trial, I am mindful of the usual conditions which include reporting, electronic monitoring device (“EMD”), and curfew. In my view those conditions could suffice to ensure the attendance of the Applicant at his trial, but they would not suffice to ensure that the Applicant does not interfere with the witnesses in this matter, or to prevent re-offending and preserve public order.
22. In the circumstances and having regard to the foregoing reasons I find that the Applicant is not a fit and proper candidate to be admitted to bail. Bail is therefore denied.
